People were tested for their ability to remember a short paragraph. They responded more quickly and accurately to inferred information than to the information that was actually presented. This provided strong evidence for the constructive nature of comprehension and memory. The Social Sciences Citation Index® (SSCI®) indicates that this paper has been cited in over 100 publications since 1972.